

31: the psychology of adventure

1. As advertised, this is a hard worksheet, but one that would appeal to many teachers, tertiary students and nascent philosophers among high school students.
2. The subject matter was once taught as a part of the Year 12 Victorian outdoor education course.
3. The questions are all open and the answers will tend to be subjective (which in itself is neither good nor bad). However, it is probably obvious enough that the author agrees with each of the 6 statements. (He or she could be wrong, however!)
